1. Type only, arranged and organized creatively. Very clear and simple. "blackout"

2. Illustrate in some way unity, people working together, sharing, a community. Colorful, happy. "it takes a village"

3. Somber. A world of greed and not sharing anything. Bleak, selfish. No one learning anything.

4. Feature famous artworks that appropriated heavily. Imagine a world without this great art.

5. Black and white political cartoon. Satire. Nerdy scrawny inmates and big burly inmates talking about their "crimes" that put them there.

"I think it's a good idea because it's people trading music. It has nothing to do with industry or finance, it's just people that want music and there's nothing wrong with that. It's the same as someone turning on the f*ckin radio, it's the same as someone putting a cassette in a cassette deck when the BBC plays a special radio session. I don't think it's a crime, it's been going on for years. It's the same as people making tapes for each other. The industry is more threatened by it because it's the worldwide web and it's a broader scope of trading, but I don't think it's such a f*ckin horrible thing. The first thing we should do is get all the f*ckin millionaires to shut their mouths, and stop bitching about the 25 cents a time they're losing."

The greatest danger to musicians is not Gnutella. It is the label. The greatest danger to actors and film makers is not DeCSS. It is the studio. These corporate masters care little for the artists who are filling their 4 car garages with new Porsches and filling their private jets with fuel and "hostesses."

What they do care about is controlling how you listen to music, or watch movies, and, increasingly, how you discuss and react to our creations.

"To me, the most important thing is that people come and sing along when we pull into town on tour," he says. "Sharing music is not a crime. It shouldn't be. There should be a deeper meaning to making music than just selling downloads."

7. Real quotes from artists about wanting to share their work freely and publicly.

9. Evolution, starting with one thing and altering it over time to be something else. Show how copying and appropriating from eventually turns into something else entirely.
